WORDS OF WISDOM

Dr. Sakir Yavuz

WORDS OF WISDOM

"Anyone who criticizes has achieved nothing. Anyone who discusses, does not want to create anything." - Dr. Sakir Yavuz

Success is achieved through tireless efforts and diligence. The most successful global leaders have had their share of lows before getting on top of their respective industries. No wonder a third person only sees the position they have attained and not the hard work behind getting there. Society is full of people who criticize every other person's pursuit of life and career. As a result of one's failures, a person tends to envy everyone around them. They have been unsuccessful in gaining a respectable position in their careers.

There is another category of people who can talk to lengths but cannot put their words into action. These people have ideas but are afraid to take risks to achieve their goals. So, it is true that those who discuss too much do not want to make a difference in their lives and others. Because a person who works hard does not highlight his achievements until success roars in. Such people can be taken as an example to never indulge in meaningless conversations or criticize others. We have no right to judge others based on our personal experiences.

We must focus on our goals and put in every effort without worrying about the result.

STUDENT SUCCESS SPOTLIGHT

Hajara Muhammad Musa
ATAFOM LANGUAGE ACADEMY Student from Nigeria

I have always believed that we cannot do anything without hope and confidence and that's why optimism is my faith towards achieving anything. I've always loved to not contribute to my family alone but touch lives and impact the lives of so many people.

My biggest achievement this year is that, I was offered admission at the Great ATAFOM University. The admission was a great achievement as it will help me widen my horizon and also exposes me to the outside world.

A dream of course becomes a goal when action is taken towards its achievement. I kick-started by baking cakes at home, to delivering snacks to different kinds of party, to catering for large event delicacies.

Apparently, that was not my only goal, I wanted to impact lives by teaching people the culinary skill, I wanted to contribute to the system that promotes women empowerment and eradicates joblessness and unemployment. With the little knowledge I had then, I summoned the courage to organize my first catering class, only few people registered but I wasn't discouraged, I kept on working on myself and kept organizing classes, before I knew it, I was already running a monthly class with students from far and near. Also, I moved from a space that only takes 6-10 students to a space that takes 20- 40 students all at once. What could be more achieving than this??

My dream is to have trained thousands of students in the next 5 to 7 years and to have a training school in every state in Nigeria God's willing.

I believe that if I can do it, anyone anywhere can do it too.

STUDENT DIARIES: YOUR VOICES, YOUR EXPERIENCES

Stay Active Throughout the Day. Incorporate physical activity into your daily routine. Whether it's taking short walks, using stairs instead of elevators, doing household chores, or engaging in exercise sessions, aim to move regularly. Regular physical activity helps maintain weight, strengthens muscles and bones, improves mood, and reduces the risk of various health conditions, including heart disease and diabetes. Strive for at least 150 minutes of moderate-intensity exercise per week, as recommended by health authorities, and remember that any amount of movement adds up and contributes to better health.

IMPROVE YOUR COMMUNICATION
SKILL SETS FOR BETTER INTERACTION

By Comfort Bulus

Effective communication is more than just hearing and speaking; it also allows for the expression of ideas and emotions. Deep communication abilities are essential for career advancement, particularly in sales, marketing, tutoring, management, leadership, business, and volunteering. Although email and texting are becoming increasingly prevalent, the importance of listening and speaking personally cannot be overstated.

Active listening, grasping the context, paying attention, making direct eye contact, and watching body language are all necessary for effective communication in everyday life. Building helpful relationships is vital. Developing communication skills is similar to learning a new language since it opens up opportunities and relationships with people from all backgrounds and cultures. It's similar to learning a new language so that you can communicate effectively with others.

Communication is conveying messages by speaking, listening, writing, and comprehension, which requires at least two people. Good interpersonal skills are essential in many aspects of life since they are employed in a variety of communication channels, including texting, emailing, talking, and social media. Ineffective communication can result in unsolved concerns and difficulties, ultimately harming personal relationships. Poor workplace communication can cause uncertainty, misunderstandings, and confrontations between employees and bosses, resulting in a difficult working atmosphere. This lack of predictability and stability reduces job satisfaction and morale, resulting in lower production, efficiency, stress, and conflict.

Effective communication entails the clear, succinct, and intentional sharing of information between individuals or groups, which results in mutual understanding. It entails employing verbal and nonverbal cues, active listening, and empathy to effectively deliver messages and achieve objectives while cultivating positive relationships. A better method of talking entails a variety of features and talents, with five factors being critical for efficient communication.

Clarity, active listening, empathy, feedback, and adaptability are all essential components of effective communication. Clarity involves using brief language and avoiding confusion, whereas active listening entails actively listening and displaying real interest in the other person's words. Empathy means understanding others' emotions, displaying positive body language, and communicating openly. Feedback should be specific, timely, and constructive, promoting open communication and reciprocation. Adaptability entails tailoring your style to meet the preferences and demands of the other person, taking into account their cultural background, personality type, and communication preferences. Staying adaptable in your approach will guarantee that your message is clear, engaging, and courteous. By concentrating on these aspects, you may promote healthy and effective communication.

Social media enables people to connect and reconnect, but it can also contribute to isolation and difficulties in face-to-face encounters. Meeting in person is vital, as emojis are less effective than seeing someone's smile. While social media allows for rapid communication, exchanging photographs and music, and staying up to date, it also gives emotional support during difficult times and limits the availability of one-on-one interactions.

The internet has reduced our degree of connectivity, making it difficult to locate reliable connections in public locations. People frequently use their smart devices, making it unnecessary to initiate interactions. To break the ice and build new relationships, ask strangers about their devices, even if they don't want one. While social media is here to stay, it's crucial to interact in person to immediately determine whether someone is worth speaking with. This will allow you to connect with people who are worth chatting to.

Effective communication is essential for developing stronger relationships because it promotes understanding, trust, and connection. Active listening, open expression of feelings, the use of "I" statements, avoiding blame, and being aware of nonverbal signs are all effective communication tactics. Active listening indicates real attention, comprehension, and respect, which promotes open communication and trust. Empathy is essential in developing emotional connections, creating a supportive environment, and strengthening emotional ties. These tactics assist individuals in expressing needs, resolving problems, and establishing a solid basis for good relationships.
